

Directions for the classwork:

- 1) Have students number off 0a – 0b, 1a, 1b, 2a, and 2b.
- 2) Have them report to their assigned letter, and give students a set time per letter to have every student write an observation based on the letter and questions given. (5-7 min per station)
- 3) Have students rotate. When they get to the new station, have them first read over what is already there. Then they should add to this. I like to have them rotate to every station (at 3 stations).
- 4) Once each group is complete, have the first group circle the 2-3 pieces of evidence they think are strongest about the letter.
- 5) Have students rotate. They should read everything at their new station and then they have 2-3 quick marks to give out on circles – they can put a check if they think what was already circled is the strongest, or they can circle a new piece of evidence in their color. Repeat this process so students get to each station.
- 6) Once they are all in the chart in the back, synthesizing answers and projecting on the board to share what they've learned, etc.
