

Nature vs. Nurture

What does it mean to be born with certain characteristics, traits, or potential? Do we have control over our own behavior or are our actions a result of the environment? Human traits, differences, and abilities are the result of a combination of both nature and nurture. Human traits, or qualities, are usually the result of the combination of environment and inheritance. In this article, we will explore the nature vs. nurture debate and the many ways in which they interact.

The nature vs. nurture debate is a long-standing argument that has been around for centuries. Some people believe that our traits are determined by our genes, while others believe that our environment is the primary factor. In this article, we will explore the nature vs. nurture debate and the many ways in which they interact. We will also look at the history of the debate and the different theories that have been proposed over time.

At the core of the nature vs. nurture debate is the question of how much of our traits are determined by our genes and how much is determined by our environment. Some people believe that our genes are the primary factor in determining our traits, while others believe that our environment is the primary factor. There is also a third group of people who believe that both genes and environment play a role in determining our traits. This group of people is called the "interactionist" group. They believe that our genes and environment interact to create the traits that we see in ourselves.

The nature vs. nurture debate is a complex one, and there is no simple answer. There are many factors that contribute to our traits, and it is important to remember that no single factor is the sole determining factor. It is the combination of genes and environment that creates the traits that we see in ourselves. This is why it is important to consider both nature and nurture when trying to understand ourselves.

Linguistics grade 1 3 University of Bonn Institut f r Anglistik Amerikanistik und Keltologie course Language Acquisition
Psycholinguistik language English abstract This paper aims at exploring how the views on language acquisition have developed over time where they conflict each other and whether it is possible to position oneself on either side The nature vs nurture debate is an everlasting discussion not only in the area of linguistics but science in general This is what makes it particularly interesting because there is always new information to expect Furthermore it is an issue not limited to academic discourse only but one that appears in everyday conversation An interesting aspect of language acquisition more specifically the knowledge of language is the question if children arrive at such knowledge by the mere exposure to positive evidence i e the language of adults they are surrounded with or if negative evidence also has an impact i e children s knowledge of language is based on explicit or implicit feedback to whether an utterance was in some way incorrect The two terms will be defined and looked into in more detail in the second chapter In the following the correlation between the nature vs nurture debate and language acquisition will be explained first The respective chapter provides a brief insight into how the nativist approach developed mainly based on Chomsky s 1988 notion of Universal Grammar UG and the type of criticism it brought along It further explains the connection between the respective theories and the grammatical aspect of language acquisition In the last section the main problems of experience based language learning will be displayed and defined The third chapter starts with a section dedicated to where the particular view that humans need innate structures for a correct knowledge of language stems from It continues with a detailed look on the no negative evidence problem The non existence of negative evidence and which role it plays in terms of language acquisition will be explored from different standpoints by nativists as well as non nativists
