WATER-PROOFING IS CRUCIAL THESE DAYS The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has issued a new rule that requires all new buildings to be designed to prevent water leaks. The rule is part of a larger effort to reduce the amount of water that is lost from buildings. The EPA estimates that about 10 percent of the water that is used in buildings is lost through leaks. This is a significant amount of water, especially in areas where water is scarce. The new rule requires that all new buildings be designed to prevent leaks of more than 10 percent of the water that is used. This means that buildings must be designed with a leak detection system that can detect leaks of more than 10 percent of the water that is used. The rule also requires that buildings be designed with a water-saving device that can reduce the amount of water that is used by more than 10 percent. The rule is expected to be implemented in 2005.
