

Barber: We are a more robust Edwards, relative performance doesn't change much. Perhaps other performance may also change, but not necessarily in the right direction, and maybe not like Barber thinks. Barber's position is the right direction. Characteristic 10 points, three different places, 1-10.

• The government can either have a laissez faire approach, where no controls are imposed against business firms by either laws or taxes, or place comprehensive controls. The costs of business, which is the quantity they can produce, will be affected by the various controls which are placed on business activity, such as:

- minimum price controls prevent the business from pricing the product at any price.
- the amount of the output business can produce cannot be specified.
