Diagram illustrating cellular respiration within the mitochondrion. Cellular respiration is the process of breaking down glucose to produce energy. The diagram shows the following steps:

1. Glycolysis is the first stage of cellular respiration. It occurs in the cytoplasm and involves the breakdown of glucose into pyruvate. This process produces a small amount of ATP and NADH, which are used in the subsequent stages of respiration.
2. The Citric Acid Cycle is the second stage of cellular respiration. It occurs in the mitochondrial matrix and involves the breakdown of pyruvate into carbon dioxide and water. This process produces a large amount of NADH and FADH₂, which are used in the Electron Transport Chain.
3. The Electron Transport Chain is the third stage of cellular respiration. It occurs on the inner mitochondrial membrane and involves the transfer of electrons from NADH and FADH₂ to oxygen. This process produces a large amount of ATP and water.
4. Cellular respiration is a complex process that involves many steps and the use of many different molecules. The diagram above provides a simplified overview of the process, but it is important to understand the details of each stage in order to fully appreciate the complexity of cellular respiration.
5. Cellular respiration is a highly regulated process. The rate of respiration is controlled by a variety of factors, including the availability of glucose and oxygen, the concentration of ATP, and the presence of certain enzymes. This regulation ensures that the cell is able to produce the amount of energy it needs to survive.
6. Cellular respiration is a fundamental process that is essential for the survival of all living organisms. It is the primary way in which cells generate energy, and it is the source of the energy that powers all of the other processes of life.
