

A. Higher temperatures increases the rate at which organic matter decomposes, therefore increasing the rate of soil formation from humus to topsoil. Increased precipitation may cause erosion, removing soil and preventing its formation if humus from established vegetation is not present. If vegetation and humus are present, increased precipitation will increase the decomposition rate of organic matter and accelerate soil formation.

B. (i) The A horizon contains many decomposers or macroinvertebrates such as millipedes, earthworms, and pillbugs.

(ii) The A horizon contains plant macronutrients such as nitrogen oxides, phosphorus compounds, and potassium ions.

C. (i) Fertilizing crops with inorganic, industrial nitrates can cause elevated nitrates in groundwater.

(ii) After irrigation, inorganic nitrate fertilizers enter agricultural runoff into bodies of water that feed groundwater, or dissolve in water and infiltrate into groundwater.

D. (i) ~~Acidic~~ ^{Acids} soil leaches nutrient ions (potassium, nitrates, and phosphorus) from the soil and withholds them from plants, and deficiencies in these macronutrients, which are the determinants of plant growth, will cause diminished growth or premature death in plants.

(ii) Adding limestone to soil can remediate acid deposition, because limestone is primarily made of CaCO_3 , and CO_3 is the conjugate base to the acid H_2CO_3 , so it will neutralize acid in the soil.

E. Climate change is causing global sea level rise, which ~~may~~ causes salt water intrusion. When salt water moves farther inland, the salinity of soil increases beyond the tolerance of many coastal plant species. Also, climate change is increasing the frequency of severe storms, and increased occurrences of severe flooding increases erosion, removing the nutrient rich topsoil and leaving bare subsoil behind. Therefore, climate change can degrade soil by increasing its salinity and eroding topsoil.
