They can also bring their skills, qualifications, and experience and greater personal responsibility to their work, particularly those with higher levels of responsibility. This, however, is not sufficient and goes against the general trend of the industry. Therefore, the industry must take a more active role in addressing these issues, including the education and training of the younger generation, and the promotion of a culture of safety and responsibility within the industry. This will help to ensure that the industry continues to grow and thrive, while also protecting the safety and well-being of its workers and the public.
