

and the 1990s. Although the environmental movement has been the driving force behind the growth of green building, the movement has been joined by a variety of other actors, including the building industry, the government, and the public. The green building movement has been shaped by a variety of factors, including the desire for sustainable development, the need for energy efficiency, and the desire to reduce the environmental impact of buildings. The movement has also been influenced by the work of a number of organizations, including the U.S. Green Building Council, the International Green Building Council, and the World Green Building Council. The green building movement has been successful in promoting sustainable development and has helped to create a more sustainable future for the planet.
