One important new finding, and one which has been frequently pointed out, is that older women are probably more efficient than younger women in the use of their reproductive and breast cancer resources. Confounding this finding, although there is a general, consistent pattern of older women using more services, including services in general, older women are less likely to use services for breast cancer screening services, although older women have higher rates of breast cancer than younger women. Women with children are less likely to use services for breast cancer screening services, although older women have higher rates of breast cancer than younger women. Women with children are less likely to use services for breast cancer screening services, although older women have higher rates of breast cancer than younger women.
