Some limited improvements occurred. It was this combined situation of more severe weather, more severe droughts, and declining groundwater storage, which drove the water management agencies to consider drought related or groundwater related measures. Many groundwater protection measures have been adopted. Amongst these measures are the following: Groundwater Management of the groundwater resources (e.g. 1992), Well Dewatering for the water supply, Groundwater Recharge and Groundwater Protection (e.g. 1993). The latter measure requires the use of boreholes to collect rainwater and store it in tanks. This measure is to reduce surface runoff, which may damage surface soil and trees. The groundwater protection measures, on the other hand, are to ban groundwater mining and groundwater protection measures, such as Prohibition (e.g. 1994) and Groundwater Substitution. Because the latter measures are more severe, they are often implemented without groundwater protection measures in combination. The groundwater protection measures and groundwater substitution measures are performed and enforced more strictly. Despite these measures, groundwater use continues to be more and more over-exploited.
