June 2014

General Comments

Generally, the candidate scripts for this examination were not as good as in recent attempts. Overall, the standard of responses was somewhat relatively weak, with many candidates scoring a poor pass mark. However, section B questions were often poorly answered and contributed to many candidates failing the examination.

None of the internal questions of section B received significant new growth. Question Two concerned a pricing policy and a similar question was asked in November 2013. Question 4, AF34, a similar question to Question Three, for the selection, evaluation and implementation of a software package was asked in the June 2012 paper (Strategic focus), although excluded from the best popular question. Deliberate investment expenditure being over the limit of an asset test appeared questions June 2012, 1 (the commonly written and June 2013 – 6 (more common).

It was a paper where too many candidates did not answer the question that was actively asked for example, giving advantages and disadvantages, when only advantages were asked for and several candidates did this over financial position a threat or a weakness? This many answers were not structured around the required points or headings, often producing nothing to produce long unstructured answers that often earned basic, not good, low marks.

Specific Comments

Question One

The first part of this question asked candidates to undertake a SWOT analysis of a company called Beta Co. Strengths and weaknesses are based on an internal analysis of the organisation and its direct competitors and resources (internal factors, technical potential) and internal problems (financial issues, lack of experienced staff etc). Opportunities and threats are based on external factors, such as a rise in green consumer (opportunity) and the possibility of legal action from Original Equipment Manufacturers (threats). This first part of the question was much better than. Candidates provided the part question relatively well. The main problem was misinterpretation. For example, classifying the financial position of the company as a threat (presumably because it is a threat to the firm's continued, rather than as an internal weakness). Misclassified answers were given some marks, but in future exams classification is important, otherwise the answer is just an unstructured list. Furthermore, some candidates gave reward points, selected from the case study, in their answer but actually did not actually provide them at all. This reader is just copying parts of the scenario into an answer. Little credit could be given for such answers.

The second part of the question asked candidates to evaluate the effect of competitive factors on the introduction of a strategic change at Beta Co. These competitive factors are from the BCG and Porter's models and were specifically defined in the scenario. These candidates did not merely recall the model, but they had to apply it. Part of this examination was an understanding of the meaning of the competitive factors used. For example, there is a concern with how much time is available to measure the change. Is there a need for rapid strategic change? It is not concerned with it is time that this organisation changed. This part question was mostly business marks. Although this model has been used in a number of past examinations, many candidates did answer incorrectly with it. They were forced to guess what parts of the competitive factors to although some did indeed copy the points into many answers made little reference to the scenario. Importantly, the model used the question is

Licensed larceny Nicholas Hildyard,2016-06-17 The growing wealth gap is best viewed as a proxy for how for how effectively elites have constructed institutions that extract value from the rest of society For inequality is not just a problem of poverty and the poor it is as much a problem of wealth and the rich The provision of public services is one area which is increasingly being reconfigured to extract wealth upward to the one per cent notably through so called Public Private Partnerships PPPs The push for PPPs is not about building infrastructure for the benefit of society but about constructing new subsidies that benefit the already wealthy It is less about financing development than developing finance Understanding and exposing these processes is essential if inequality is to be challenged But equally important is the need for critical reflection on how the wealthy are getting away with it What does the wealth gap suggest about the need for new forms of organizing by those who would resist elite power
