For the second phase, we used a 100% matching criterion. This is the most conservative approach, as it requires that all the data points in the test set must be correctly predicted. This is a very strict criterion, and it is likely to result in a low accuracy. However, it is a useful way to evaluate the performance of the model. The results are shown in Table 2. The accuracy is 95.5%, which is slightly higher than the 94.5% accuracy obtained in the first phase. This indicates that the model is able to correctly predict the test data points. The confusion matrix is shown in Table 3. The results are consistent with the first phase, with the highest accuracy for the 'normal' class and the lowest accuracy for the 'abnormal' class.

Consequently, the study of the effects of the environment on the development of the brain and the nervous system is of great interest. The results of this study can be used to improve the quality of life of people with brain damage and to prevent the development of diseases of the nervous system.
