Art Teacher Educator as Rhythmanalyst Myoungsun Sohn,2017 The process of this research itself is a transitional experience for me in becoming an art teacher educator through working with for becoming art teachers in the Advanced Practicum A ED 489 at Penn State University Working learning and researching in the course as a graduate teaching assistant for four years became part of everyday life during my doctoral course Moreover meeting both the pre service teachers and their students together in Saturday Art Classes helped me to recollect my own lived experience as a student pre service teacher teacher and teacher researcher in diverse places of learning and teaching art in a more critical eye This condition motivated me to conduct this research mapping the unknown placenever experienced beforeA ED 489 as a place space time s and part of lived landscape of the professional development of both myself and the pre service art teachers Through participant observation including photography and video recording as everyday practices and using three geographical concepts place space and landscape as different lenses I map out the texture of A ED 489 and A ED 489 making process First using the idea of place as a way of making sense of self practice and others as community as three rhythms I explore the possibilities and potentialities of the course for the professional development of becoming art teachers in my own understanding Second using the idea of space time I a moving self and full participant investigate A ED 489 making process throughout the repetitive and cyclical curriculum practices with the pre service art teachers and the faculty Third I conduct narrative mapping interviews in order to bring light how each participant embodied A ED 489 experience as a whole and related diverse curriculum space time s to each other Throughout this research I understand that mapping functions as both a method of rhythmanalysis in space time s of becoming and a metaphor of participants inhabitant knowledge exploring A ED 489 experience as a temporal lived landscape making a bridge between the previous and the future experiences for becoming art teacher educator
