Becoming Writers In The Elementary Classroom Visions And Decisions:

Becoming Writers in the Elementary Classroom Katie Van Sluys,2011 This book illustrates how teachers of elementary age writers bring their beliefs about teaching and learning to life through the visions they hold for writers writing and the world as well as through the decisions they make every day in their classrooms Teachers today face contextual challenges and pressures that may conflict with their visions of effective teaching Katie Van Sluys demonstrates how to re claim our professional practice to ensure that young people have the opportunity to become competent constantly growing writers who use writing to think communicate and pose as well as solve problems Using NCTE s Beliefs about the Teaching of Writing as a starting point for understandings about writing research and what it can tell us about effective writing practices in elementary classrooms Van Sluys invites us to articulate our own beliefs as we explore why and what we write how we write and how we teach how we assess progress and how we advocate for the practices we believe in Through real classroom examples and teacher and student reflections she helps us understand how the decisions that both we and our students make today can help them not only learn to write well but also to use writing to create the world they want to live in
