

1.2 THE DIFFERENT COMPONENTS OF SOUTH AFRICAN LAW

South African law is a complex system which consists of a number of different components. These components are the different sources of law which are used to determine the rights and obligations of individuals and entities in the legal system. The components of South African law are the Constitution, the common law, customary law, religious law, and the law of the various provinces and municipalities.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the country. It sets out the fundamental principles of the legal system and the rights and obligations of citizens. The common law is the body of law developed by the courts over time. Customary law is the law of the various provinces and municipalities. Religious law is the law of the various religious communities.

The law of the various provinces and municipalities is the law which applies to the residents of those areas. The law of the various religious communities is the law which applies to the members of those communities.
