Automation in Warehouse Development

Roelof Hamberg, Jacques Verriet, 2011-10-28 The warehouses of the future will come in a variety of forms but with a few common ingredients. Firstly, human operational handling of items in warehouses is increasingly being replaced by automated ingredients. Secondly, the use of sensors and robotics to track and move items within the warehouse. Thirdly, the use of software to manage inventory and predict demand. These changes are likely to lead to more efficient and cost-effective warehouses in the future.

item handling Extended warehouse automation counteracts the scarcity of human operators and supports the quality of picking processes Secondly the development of models to simulate and analyse warehouse designs and their components facilitates the challenging task of developing warehouses that take into account each customer's individual requirements and logistic processes Automation in Warehouse Development addresses both types of automation from the innovative perspective of applied science In particular it describes the outcomes of the Falcon project a joint endeavour by a consortium of industrial and academic partners The results include a model based approach to automate warehouse control design analysis models for warehouse design concepts for robotic item handling and computer vision and autonomous transport in warehouses Automation in Warehouse Development is targeted at both academic researchers and industrial practitioners It provides state of the art research on warehouse automation and model based warehouse design These topics have been addressed from a systems engineering perspective by researchers from different disciplines including software control and mechanical engineering with a clear focus on the industrial applications of their research Automation in Warehousing R.
