

HIGH-VOLTAGE SPARK PROTECTION

CLIPPING DIODES

Clipping diodes are used to limit the peak voltage of a waveform. For example, if the peak voltage of a sine wave is 10 V, the clipping diode will limit the peak voltage to 5 V. The diode will conduct current when the voltage across it is 5 V or greater. The diode will then conduct current to ground, effectively bypassing the 5 V peak voltage. This is useful for protecting electronic components from overvoltage damage. Clipping diodes are also used in power supplies to limit the output voltage. For example, if the output voltage of a power supply is 12 V, a clipping diode can be used to limit the output voltage to 10 V. This is useful for protecting electronic components from overvoltage damage.

512 Chapter 12

CLIPPING DIODE The voltage across a diode is limited to the voltage required to forward bias the diode. If a diode is reverse biased, the forward voltage is 0.3 V. If the diode is made from germanium, the forward voltage is 0.1 V.

When diodes are used to limit a signal, the diodes are called "clipping diodes." The diodes are reverse biased to prevent current flow. The diodes are forward biased to limit the voltage across the diodes. The diodes are reverse biased to prevent current flow. The diodes are forward biased to limit the voltage across the diodes.

LIGHT-EMITTING DIODES

OPERATION An LED emits light when current flows through the diode. Light-emitting diodes (LEDs) are made from gallium arsenide (GaAs) or gallium phosphide (GaP). The LED emits light when current flows through the diode. The LED emits light when current flows through the diode. The LED emits light when current flows through the diode.

The forward-bias voltage required for an LED to begin emitting light is approximately 2.0 V for silicon diodes. Light-emitting diodes (LEDs) emit light when current flows through the diode. The LED emits light when current flows through the diode.

An LED will only light if the voltage is 2.0 V or greater (forward bias). The LED will only light if the voltage is 2.0 V or greater than the voltage on the input. The LED will only light if the voltage is 2.0 V or greater than the voltage on the input.
