Roadway Lighting Design Guide American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials,2005 This guide replaces the 1984 publication entitled An Informational Guide for Roadway Lighting It has been revised and brought up to date to reflect current practices in roadway lighting The guide provides a general overview of lighting systems from the point of view of the transportation departments and recommends minimum levels of quality The guide incorporates the illuminance and luminance design methods but does not include the small target visibility STV method

Road Lighting Wout van Bommel,2014-11-21 This book outlines the underlying principles on which modern road lighting is based and provides the reader with knowledge of how these principles should be applied in practice This book offers a completely fresh approach to the subject reflecting how the technology of road lighting has progressed to keep up with the changes in lamp technology especially in solid state light sources and the increasing awareness of energy use and environmental issues The book is divided into three parts Part One describes lighting of open roads with chapters discussing visual performance and comfort including the effects of mesopic vision and age and international standards and recommendations for road lighting Lighting equipment is introduced specifically lamps and luminaires in terms of their practical properties and features but also the road surface and its characteristics A chapter on Lighting Design makes the link between theory and practice providing the reader with the knowledge needed for effective lighting design including aspects relating to sustainability The final chapter of Part One deals with lighting calculation conventions and measurements Part Two is devoted to light pollution The negative consequences of light pollution are described and tactics to restrict light pollution explained Lighting criteria are defined that can be used by the lighting designer to guarantee installations stay within acceptable limits International standards and recommendations on the restriction of light pollution are discussed Part Three is devoted to tunnel lighting with chapters discussing visual performance in tunnel environments lighting criteria standards and recommendations and concluding with a chapter on tunnel lighting equipment and design This book is a valuable resource for road lighting designers and engineers students of lighting design and engineering town planners traffic engineers environmental specialists and lamp and luminaire developers and manufacturers

LEDs, Curfews and Solar Power Reduce Lighting Costs

Kenneth A. Winter, Virginia. Department of Transportation. Research Library, 2008 VDOT and other highway agencies have explored lighting changes in the past. Many state departments of transportation are searching for ways to be more energy efficient while maintaining a transportation system that is safe, facilitates movement of people and goods and improves the overall quality of life of citizens. Local budget shortfalls, overall economic downturns, upward trends in energy costs and increasing concern for the environmental impact of highway operations are driving state departments of transportation and similar agencies to reconsider current practices in roadway lighting. Such changes have been considered before, typically during difficult economic times or times when the cost of energy has risen unexpectedly starting with the Oil Embargo of 1973-74. In fact VDOT has explored the issue from conservation, safety and risk assessment angles. The purpose of roadway lighting is to provide improved safety, security and aesthetics for the various users of the roadways and associated facilities including bridge and tunnel lighting, sign lighting, roadway delineation and even parking facilities. AASHTO's Roadway Lighting Design Guide October 2005 p 7 cites National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) crash data as showing that 90 percent of fatal and injury crashes occur on the roadway where lighting guidelines specify that light be placed. In multiple vehicle crashes, the number of overall crashes tapers off substantially after midnight on weekdays and after 4:00 a.m. on weekends. At these late hours, most of the crashes are single vehicle off-roadway crashes for which lighting may not be likely to help except possibly at decision making points such as ramp, gorges, intersections and merge areas. AASHTO's guide notes that crash rates increase where lighting systems are turned off or where every other luminary is turned off. Dimming or lighting curfews may be less likely to result in increased crash rates. Still, in an effort to save money, many agencies periodically consider altering the way they light roadways. Some options for reducing energy consumption related to roadway lighting include Solar powered lighting for overhead highway signs or in other standalone applications. Lighting spaced farther apart or the every other luminary technique. Reducing the overall amount or level of continuous roadway lighting. Replacing traditional lighting elements with energy efficient elements, namely LED lights. Increased lighting curfews or incremental dimming of roadway or sign lights. Using more highly retroreflective materials on signs or safety markings or experimenting with electroluminescence or photoluminescence. Using sensors or other advanced technologies to automate lighting in a more precise way During the past decade several highway agencies have switched off roadway lighting during periods of energy shortages to reduce maintenance and operating costs However quite often such lighting was restored when nighttime accidents increased One fundamental problem with such light reduction techniques was that lighting was reduced or eliminated during the entire nighttime period rather than only when traffic volume was low By providing full lighting during periods when volumes are high and the roadway operated near capacity and providing reduced lighting as the traffic decreases the potential exists for realizing considerable energy savings while still providing the benefits of full lighting at key locations i e intersections and at key times i e high volume where driver decision making is the most critical and the greatest visibility is required Roadway Lighting Design Guide October 2005 p 7 Guidance for Implementation of the AASHTO Strategic Highway Safety Plan Timothy R.
