Course designation and goals

BIOL 121 Cellular life: introduction to cell and molecular biology (4). This course includes the topics of biological chemistry, cell structure, metabolism, classical and molecular genetics. Laboratories provide the students with opportunities to investigate living organisms at a cellular and molecular level. Intended for science majors.

General information

During the term you will be responsible for reading the material listed on the syllabus prior to the class meeting the information is to be discussed. This requirement does suggest quizzes could occur. Lab is no exception. You are to be familiar with the labs and their objectives before coming into lab. Although we primarily will use the textbook for lecture, it also will be a reference for our laboratory work.

Presentation of materials will be through problem-based learning, discussion of relevant topics and lecture. Audio/ visual materials might be used in the lecture and laboratory sections as supplements to the information provided. Along with learning the material outlined in the course, it also is an objective of the course to strengthen student verbal communication skills. To meet this objective, students will participate in such activities including, but not limited to, solving problems in small groups, participating in group assignments outside of class, and helping to answer questions in the classroom. Together, these types of activities will work to foster better student understanding of the subject.
