

Chapter 22: Sexual Reproductive Modes: The Origin of Species

Overview

1. Which ways Darwin's hypothesis of speciation?

speciation:

(1) Define speciation:

Are reproductively processes in which new species arise, distinct or minor species.

(2) Distinguish between allopatric and sympatric speciation

Allopatric is evolutionary change within the species over change in the allele frequencies in populations over generations. When speciation is allopatric change about the species level. For example, two major groups of organisms, birds are separated in floating plates, through isolation of geographic islands.

Explain it

(1) List the biological processes involved in allopatric speciation.

A species is a population or group of populations whose members have the potential to interbreed and produce viable, fertile offspring, but the reproductive isolates, neither offspring with members of other subgroups.

(2) Factors required for the formation of new species?

Reproductive isolation. There are a number of factors that contribute (some) that usually result in reproductive isolation and geographic isolation.

(3) Factors involved?

Hybrids are offspring that result from breeding of individuals from two different species or from two individuals members of the same species.

(4) Explain the two types of isolation that maintain reproductive isolation:

Prezygotic isolation is reproductive barrier that prevents mating between individuals from interbreeding or interbreeding resulting in offspring. Postzygotic isolation is reproductive barrier that prevents hybrid offspring produced by cross different species from surviving and viable fertile offspring.
