For a more detailed description of the various subtypes of dementia, see the section on dementia in the previous chapter. In addition to the cognitive and functional impairments, a group of non-cognitive features is also of importance for diagnosis. These features are used for various types of assessment during a dementia care interview.

Our observations from the field and our literature review indicate that the main variable driving the increase in the number of species is the presence of the introduced Acacia species. This pattern is consistent with the general distribution of Acacia in Australia, where Acacia species are the most abundant woody species in Australia, and are found in almost all habitats.

3. Indirect charges: Indirect charges are those that are not directly related to a particular project but are necessary for the smooth functioning of the organization. Examples include salaries of administrative staff, rent, utilities, and supplies. These charges are typically allocated to projects based on a percentage of their total costs or a fixed rate per unit of output.
