

REFUNDABLE AND NON-REFUNDABLE TICKETS

Refundable vs non-refundable tickets typically come down to trade-offs between price and flexibility. Although non-refundable tickets are substantially more popular due to their significantly lower cost, refundable tickets provide a great deal of peace of mind.

- Refundable Tickets: You'll probably be charged a cancellation fee if you purchased a non-refundable ticket. This cost might range from $200 for domestic travel to $750 for international travel. However, American Airlines will often give you a travel credit to cover the remaining amount, which you can apply to other flights. Usually, you have a year from the date of purchase to redeem this credit.
- Non-refundable tickets: Non-refundable tickets do not allow passengers to receive their money back in cases of cancellation. However, they are offered credit that can be used for other flights in the future. These usually have fewer charges compared to refundable tickets; thus, budget travelers prefer them. They sometimes have additional fees for cancellations or changes.
