

Introduction

This International Standard is based on a submission from Hewlett-Packard, Intel, and Microsoft, that described a language called C#, which was developed within Microsoft. The principal inventors of this language were Anders Hejlsberg, Scott Wiltamuth, and Peter Golde. The first widely distributed implementation of C# was released by Microsoft in July 2000, as part of its .NET Framework Initiative.

Ecma Technical Committee 39 (TC39) Task Group 2 (TG2) was formed in September 2000 to produce a standard for C#. Another Task Group, TG3, was also formed at that time to produce a standard for a library and execution environment called Common Language Infrastructure (CLI). CLI is a standard for a library and execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework. The CLI is a standard for a library and execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework. The CLI is a standard for a library and execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework.

Scope and applicability

The standard defines the syntax and semantics of the C# programming language, as well as the standard library, and the standard execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework.

The standard defines the syntax and semantics of the C# programming language, as well as the standard library, and the standard execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework. The standard defines the syntax and semantics of the C# programming language, as well as the standard library, and the standard execution environment, which is implemented in the .NET Framework.

In the definition of the standard, the goals were to design a language with the following:

- a) It is intended to be a simple, modern, general-purpose, object-oriented programming language.
- b) The language and implementation should provide support for software reuse, including inheritance, as well as strong type checking, static typing, abstraction, and encapsulation, and object-oriented programming, including inheritance, abstraction, and encapsulation, and object-oriented programming, including inheritance, abstraction, and encapsulation.
- c) The language is designed to be a strongly-typed, object-oriented language for the development of applications.
- d) Source code, compiled to an intermediate code, is generated, portable, especially for those implementations already based on the CLI.
- e) Support for interoperability is required.
- f) It is intended to be suitable for writing applications for both desktop and embedded systems, ranging from the very large, like an application operating system, down to the very small, like a microcontroller.
- g) Although not applicable, the standard will support a common set of standard library implementations. The language is implemented in a single library, as well as a standard library, as well as a standard library.

The standard, together with the standard library, is implemented in the development of the .NET Framework, which is implemented in the .NET Framework. The standard, together with the standard library, is implemented in the development of the .NET Framework, which is implemented in the .NET Framework.

The development of the standard of the standard started in January 2001.

The standard has been adopted by the standard committee of June 2000.
