Transmittance Requirements Matthew R. J. Baldock, A. John McLean, Alexander Jack McLean, C. N. Kloeden, 2004 Blue Sky Window Tinting Blue Sky Window Tinting, Vehicle Window Tinting and Visibility on the Road, 1995 Motor Vehicle Window Tinting David L. Ortman, 1988 The Effects of Motor Vehicle Window Tinting on Traffic Safety and Enforcement, 1994 The 1993 Session of the Virginia General Assembly lessened restrictions relating to the application of aftermarket tinted window films to motor vehicle glass. Effective July 1, 1993, vehicles are allowed to have window tinting treatments that do not reduce the transmittance of light below 35% for rear and rear side windows and 50% for front side windows, but no aftermarket tinting may be applied to windshields. However, the new legislation allows lower transmittance

levels for the windows on vehicles used by individuals with a medical waiver. The traffic safety community is concerned that aftermarket window tint film may increase the incidence of traffic crashes by limiting a driver's ability to see out of a vehicle and it may compromise the safety of police officers by limiting an officer's ability to see into a vehicle that he or she has stopped. The window tinting industry however notes the lack of empirical evidence correlating window tinting and traffic crashes or police officer injuries or fatalities. The concerns of industry and the traffic safety community were balanced by the adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 293 which directed the Virginia Departments of Motor Vehicles and State Police to study the issue. The study found that window tinting reduces the ability to detect targets that would be difficult to see through clear glass and this can be a liability when ambient lighting is low. In addition the adverse effects of window tinting become increasingly pronounced as transmittance goes below 70% particularly for people who wear spectacles and for older drivers. There is no evidence however that reduced visibility significantly affects drivers performance during well illuminated daytime hours. The difficulties are more likely to be manifested at night. Further by reducing the amount of light transmittance window tinting reduces the ability of an outside observer to see into a vehicle which has led to the concerns about the safety of police officers. Although there are only limited optical benefits to be derived from window tinting and there are a number of potential optical detriments there is no empirical evidence to indicate that the tinting allowed under Virginia's current laws creates a safety hazard in terms of driver performance. Thus it is recommended that Virginia's new laws on window tinting not be changed unless compelling evidence that the standards compromise safety is found in the future. However further research is recommended. It is also recommended that federal regulations and or action by the states to achieve national uniformity be encouraged in order to promote uniformity in laws and regulations concerning aftermarket window tinting.

The Effect of Reduced Transmittance Window Tinting on Drivers' Ability to Detect Targets in Their Rear-view Mirrors Dennis R. Proffitt, 1996 This study addressed the degree to which motor vehicle window tint films impede drivers ability to detect targets in their vehicle's rear view mirrors. Twenty four subjects participated. Each sat in the driver's seat of one of four experimental vehicles and attempted to detect a stationary pedestrian in one of the three rear view mirrors. Errors in detecting targets and the distances at which detection occurred were recorded. One experimental vehicle had no aftermarket window tinting and three were tinted to varying degrees. In general this study found that increased levels of window tinting were associated with an increase in the number of failures to detect a pedestrian in rear view mirrors and with a decrease in the distance at which the target could be detected. In addition increased levels of window tinting were associated with an increase in between subject variability meaning that window tinting interfered with target detection more for some subjects than for others. Automotive Window Tinting Basics, 2000 Focus on the Future, 2000
