TONE AND IRONY

Point of view:
"This number of souls in this Kingdom being usually reckoned one million and a half, it must necessarily follow, that only two hundred thousand couples should remain as breeders."

Context:
The year 1726, eighteenth-century satirists in Britain (human misery - especially children - as if they were livestock or economic units)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

- Britain in 1726 during a time of economic growth and freedom of thought
- British landlords and their wealthy tenants: Irish being at least unknown, prevailing in England's dependent tenants' land and resources
- The Church's role: clergy suffered under royal control and economic conditions, not able to help from the British government
- References of the time often suggested that children "were" or "became" social problems - criticism against the British authority

UNDERSTATEMENT

Point of view:
"These poor might be made into extremely good soldiers, and musicians, if they had government."

Context:
The suggestion is presented in a subtle way, as though it were a practical solution to the problem of a government's lack of resources. The irony is in the fact that the British government's policies of underdevelopment would be a serious threat.
