• Reverend Matthew L. R. Rice (1866-1935) was a prominent New Englander and a resident of New Haven, Connecticut, during the 1910s. While Reverend Rice was a "Methodist" (Methodist and other Protestant denominations are now united in the United Methodist Church), this New Englander was a Quaker, pacifist, and Unitarian. These three identities have shaped Reverend Rice's work, despite many religious and political differences. Reverend Rice was often an agnostic. However, he was a great lover of the spiritual life. While Reverend Rice's work has been forgotten in the United States, his life and work are well known in New England, particularly in New Haven, Connecticut. Reverend Rice's work has been forgotten in the United States, his life and work are well known in New England, particularly in New Haven, Connecticut.
