Documents diplomatiques français 1946/II France. Ministère des affaires étrangères, 2004-07-07 En 1945 malgré de graves difficultés dues aux conséquences de la défaite de 1940 et de la guerre la politique extérieure française suivait une ligne claire aussi bien en ce qui concerne l'organisation de la paix que du problème allemand des questions du Levant ou de l'Asie Par contraste le second semestre 1946 paraît hésitant marqué par de profondes divergences de vues entre les responsables par une incapacité de finir des orientations prises ou du moins par une extrême réticence à s'y risquer Il est vrai que la situation sur différents points devient particulièrement incertaine Outre les importantes difficultés en Indochine il est évident que l'aggravation de la tension entre Soviétiques et Anglo Saxons met la diplomatie française dans une position de plus en plus délicate et hésitante En même temps il est visible que les objectifs français initiaux à l'égard de l'Allemagne ne pourront pas être réalisés même si on n'ose pas le dire ouvertement eu égard à l'opinion publique et la surenchère nationaliste permanente induite par le tripartisme gouvernemental On assiste en fait à un recentrage la Sarre devient le seul objectif poursuivi avec une vigueur accrue tandis que pour la Ruhr la Rhénanie et même le rattachement de la Zone française la prochaine Bizone anglo-américaine certains responsables avancent discrètement des solutions hétérodoxes mais plus compatibles avec les vues anglo-saxonnes La nécessité de s'entendre avec Londres et Washington sur l'Allemagne et le problème de plus en plus lancinant de l'approvisionnement de la France en charbon allemand commencent en effet à dominer la question
