The Seed Drill, Crop Rotation, and Selective Breeding all became parts of agriculture. This resulted in improved living conditions, settled populations, and large enclosed farms took over. England began enclosing land, which pushed small farmers into cities. Why were populations growing with industrialization? What did a bigger population mean? Because people could earn more money and the cost of goods was falling—when a factory can produce a hundred or a thousand times more of a product than can be made by hand, prices tend to fall—it became possible for more and more people to marry earlier.
