and knowledge areas included on the Foundation Skills Framework wheel. The guide is divided into two main parts Practitioner Section and Learner Guide. The Practitioner Guide is divided into four sections based on the major areas of the wheel: basic employability skills, basic workplace knowledge, basic workplace skills, and lifelong learning skills. Each section contains an individual module for each of the corresponding foundation skills in that area. For example, basic employability skills includes works in teams, makes decisions, solves problems, demonstrates effective interpersonal relations, and demonstrates self management strategies. Each module includes keywords and concepts to build knowledge, discussion questions to further explore the use of that skill or knowledge area in the workplace context, and a variety of instructional ideas to help adult learners develop and use the skills, competencies, and knowledge areas in a workplace context. The Learner Guide includes two sections: Introduction to foundation skills, competencies, and tip Sheets. Section 1 includes a copy of the foundation skills wheel, the foundation skills self appraisal, and a chart showing which pages in the Learner Guide will help learners learn more about specific skills. Learners can complete the self appraisal independently or with practitioner guidance. The results of the self appraisal can be used to set learning goals. Section 2 includes a competency list and a tip sheet for each area of the foundation skills wheel. The competency lists provide detailed information about the foundation skills and can be used to help learners explore the breadth and depth of a particular skill. They can also be used for informal assessment. Learners can use them independently or with practitioner guidance to keep track of which competencies have been performed. The tip sheets contain strategies and background information about the foundation skills. They were designed so learners who read at a mid literacy range (5th-8th grade readability) may use them independently. Or practitioners may adapt or use them to customize instruction to learners' needs and goals, specific industries, workplaces, or job tasks.
