

Nature vs. Nurture

Nature vs Nurture is a debate between scientists about what makes people who they are. Some people believe that we are born with certain traits and abilities, while others believe that we are shaped by our environment. Both of these ideas have a lot of evidence behind them, but it's difficult to know for sure which one is right. In this article, we'll explore both sides of the debate and see what the science has to say about it.

One side of the debate is the idea that some people are born with certain traits and abilities. This is called the "nature" side of the debate. Scientists who believe in nature think that our genes and our brain are what make us who we are. They think that our traits and abilities are passed down to us from our parents, and that we can't change them. For example, they think that some people are born with a higher IQ than others, and that this is because of their genes. They also think that some people are born with certain personality traits, like being shy or outgoing, and that these traits are also passed down to them from their parents.

On the other side of the debate is the idea that our environment shapes who we are. This is called the "nurture" side of the debate. Scientists who believe in nurture think that our traits and abilities are shaped by the world around us. They think that our environment, including our family, our friends, and our culture, all play a role in who we become. For example, they think that a child who grows up in a family where everyone is educated will be more likely to go to college than a child who grows up in a family where no one goes to college. They also think that a child who grows up in a family where everyone is supportive will be more likely to succeed in life than a child who grows up in a family where no one supports them.

There are many examples of how nature and nurture both play a role in who we are. For example, a child who is born with a high IQ but who grows up in a family where no one values education will likely not go to college. On the other hand, a child who is born with a lower IQ but who grows up in a family where everyone is supportive and encourages them to learn will likely go to college and succeed. This shows that both nature and nurture are important in shaping who we are.

Conclusion

There is no simple answer to the question of whether nature or nurture is more important in shaping who we are. Both of them play a role, and the balance between them varies from person to person.

implicit feedback to whether an utterance was in some way incorrect The two terms will be defined and looked into in more detail in the second chapter In the following the correlation between the nature vs nurture debate and language acquisition will be explained first The respective chapter provides a brief insight into how the nativist approach developed mainly based on Chomsky's 1988 notion of Universal Grammar UG and the type of criticism it brought along It further explains the connection between the respective theories and the grammatical aspect of language acquisition In the last section the main problems of experience based language learning will be displayed and defined The third chapter starts with a section dedicated to where the particular view that humans need innate structures for a correct knowledge of language stems from It continues with a detailed look on the no negative evidence problem The non existence of negative evidence and which role it plays in terms of language acquisition will be explored from different standpoints by nativists as well as non nativists
