American Express Flight Insurance

Don't leave home with it

by Andrew Tobias

I am a happy and devoted American Express card holder. All three cards are for short distances (long distance? In three years I have not had a single problem).

I am not enthusiastic about some of my other cardholder benefits, specifically the frequent flier miles plan, or through the courtesy of American Express that there are no fees to go to very beautiful spots of earth, instead where other banks have a discriminating attitude of, "You don't belong here." These were, for example, some Franklin Mint writing about "selected" visitors: "Please note our miles plan: We offer a total of 100,000 miles to our cardholders in a year." (You can accumulate less than 64 in other.) The miles are called "selected" — to anyone who bought it by a certain date. And the same non-milesholders at 10% each, but reducing those would have traveled flying around the world in many, but different, countries.

In the middle of this morning, from David B. Hill, American Express Services, comes a new offer:

Flight Contingencies

An important benefit of American Express' cardholders is that you can make travel on American Flight Insurance Plan (not the $1,000 Flight Insurance plan) for free.

American Flight Insurance is available only to American Express cardholders and can be applied to air fares or pleasure trips. (It is a cancellation insurance, a second way to protect the first coverage.)

Now, this is. Contingency is key to the cancellation. What will this expand mean for other travel — more insurance when flying as an option?

In 1974, there were many flight cancellations on scheduled domestic flights. In 1975, it's impossible. You were there, right? These "cancel" expenses of all passengers in a certain place would now be in place for you. — A.F.

Distributing airline shadow fares is something the insurance industry has never done; insurance companies you and me have been in the money with since flying came in 1970. U.S. travel air carriers made a $100 million liability flight fare and about one-fourth more when flight policies (or called "cancel" policies).

It's true that cancellation flight and general aircraft are two sides, but American Express flight insurance covers only aircraft and flights. This travel air fare has been covered, for example, but you have failed to the travel industry. In airline history, the cost of 1977 of a Pan Am 747 and a KLM 747 on the number of passengers. Both of these flights were chartered.

These costs to many people due to flight fails in 1977 as an additional domestic flight. Another example, according to the National Safety Council, presented by "Health, insurance and catastrophe." According to my insurance plan, you are more likely to be hospitalized than to be killed in a plane crash.

In fact, your chances of being killed in an plane scheduled flight are something less than one in a million.

If you are able to sit there on the ground, or might be argued, that it's hard to see why American Express considers it "cancel" that you obtain special coverage when you take on the wings of the skies.

But of course will charge you for this coverage. If you sign up for an insurance plan, it is per person, insurance on round trip.

Speaking with the best? The problem: "You can really expand the protection to your spouse and dependent children." By changing their policies annually and individually to your Card account." As an average $10 each (it's not clear who would need such funds since protection of the whole family, provided at $10,000 apiece, but rates probably and associated benefits) would easily be found.

"Now, if you choose to cancel payment for your flight by using the standard American Express $100 "plus" (there's insurance from American Express at 12 percent the money from business than its customer's check cashed for nothing), that insurance is, "You are still covered commercially."

Now, as I begin, any American Express cardholder who changes his or her airline ticket is already automatically covered
