For the present purpose, we have adopted a working definition of the term 'disability' which is based on the definition of the term 'handicap' as used in the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. This definition is as follows: 'any condition, impairment or disability which hinders or prevents a person from fully and effectively participating in society on an equal basis with others'.¹ This definition of disability is based on the concept of impairment, which is defined as 'any limitation or absence of ability associated with an anatomical, physiological, mental, cognitive, emotional, behavioural, sensory, developmental or health condition'.² The term 'handicap' is defined as 'any barrier that hinders a person with a disability from fully and effectively participating in society on an equal basis with others'.³ The term 'disability' is used in this paper to refer to the concept of impairment, and the term 'handicap' is used to refer to the concept of barrier.

As a result, the study of the relationship between the two variables is of great interest. The present study attempts to examine the relationship between the two variables by using the data of the 2000 U.S. Census.
