myriad ways as they twist and birl howl and skirl laugh and greet shedding light and love on the human condition through the prism of Scotland's ancient past and its present to which I resonate as a Scottish fiddler who is fortunate enough to stumble into certain universal truths through the lens of the Scottish condition Maybe I could undertake to compose an equivalent piece of music a symphony a suite a thousand fiddle tunes but any such attempt would come short because a master poet is at work here on a large canvas Herein lies an efficacious loving joyous use of language that transcends depth This collection of poetry is the soaring song cycle of a bard in top form and it will accompany me on my journey from this point on Alasdair Fraser Scottish fiddler and composer ABOUT THE AUTHOR John Beaton's poetry is metrical and has been widely published in media as diverse as Able Muse and Gray's Sporting Journal He wrote a monthly poetry page for several years for the magazine Eyes on BC and served for four years as moderator of one of the internet's most reputable poetry workshops Eratosphere He recites his poems from memory as a spoken word performer and a poet member of the band Celtic Chaos His poetry has won several awards including the 2015 String Poet Prize and the 2012 Able Muse Write Prize for Poetry He is a retired actuary who was raised in the Scottish Highlands and lives in Qualicum Beach on Vancouver Island Canada

Animal Psalms Alfred Nicol, 2016 Alfred Nicol's Animal Psalms begins with the baseball field's organized uncertainties and continues on many a trajectory of animal ruminations with the human species well accounted for ending in the imbalance of the everyday Nuts around us The subjects include the elephant snake sheep skunk bee couple dynamics the trials and triumphs of the ruler or the everyman This is a collection rich in aphorisms on the bright and shady spectra of our interactions Recognizable soliloquies with the meditative self or dialogues with the beloved are unraveled for keen insights on the human condition deconstructing them until the knotty connecting threads are exposed Nicol gives us a mature collection of quiet reflection with wit and wisdom deployed through finely crafted poems of masterly formal dexterity PRAISE FOR ANIMAL PSALMS Dear reader I've fallen in love with this book and that will happen to you too Read for instance the very last poem Nuts and read the great How to Ignore an Invisible Man and you're hooked forever Read all the rest these poems by Alfred Nicol which have our numbers and have his own too that tell about our lives and his and the lives of snakes and bees and elephants with such humor and pity and praise for all of us human and animal in our situations It's impossible not to fall in love David Ferry author of Bewilderment winner of the National Book Award As the title Animal Psalms suggests there is reverence here a reverence that derives less from religion than from a religious attention to the things of the world from baseball games to zoo elephants to the newly beloved Nicol is a melodic writer called first to the music of words to speech that lets the sound carry the greater part of what is said He's also a poet whose images you won't soon forget They summon the real world and simultaneously render it otherworldly While the poems offer moments of ecstatic escape they're more often held in check by an Augustan wit ironic humor and a touch of Baudelaire Poise and wit prevail in these psalms they give us both despair inflected by light and illumination held fast by darkness Erica Funkhouser author of Earthly If we would only take the time to let one of Alfred Nicol's poems sink in through the brilliant latticed grid of its formal exterior how the truth of what he has to say about the human condition would hit us the way a line drive whips toward you on a dreamy summer's afternoon startling you back into the electric now I love these poems because they evoke for me the zany spiritual energy of the Beats welded as only a workman can work unwieldy things to the tempered grid of six centuries of formalism Don't be surprised if after reading these poems you find them turning back to their true subject dear reader which turns out to be none other than you Paul Mariani author of Epitaphs for the Journey ABOUT THE AUTHOR Alfred Nicol's book of poetry Elegy for Everyone won the first Anita Dorn Memorial Prize He received the Richard Wilbur Award for Winter Light He has written lyrics in French and English for nine original compositions by classical flamenco guitarist John Tavano Their CD The Subtle Thread has received airplay on WMBR's program French Toast Nicol's poems have appeared in Poetry The Hopkins Review Dark Horse First Things The New England Review Commonweal The Formalist and other literary journals as well as in Contemporary Poetry of New England and other anthologies Animal Psalms was a finalist for the 2015 Able Muse Book Award
