7.1.3 Community Health

In the previous section you studied some of the ways that will help you to remain healthy. However can you remain healthy just based on your own efforts?

Consider the following situations:

1. In the absence of potable water your mother collects water from a hand pump or a covered well in the neighbourhood.
2. Garbage is not collected for many days, bad odour emanates and mosquitoes and flies breed.
3. There is an outbreak of an infectious disease like dengue or malaria.
4. A natural calamity like Tsunami strikes certain part of your country.

How is the health of the population in such areas affected? Does it have both short term and long term effect? Try to find answers.

Community health is the practice of preventing disease and promoting health of a population through the organized efforts of society, public and private organizations, communities and individuals. It aims to improve the health of the entire population and focuses on preventing diseases rather than their treatment.

There are various activities and programmes undertaken by the government and or local organizations to maintain good health of the people and keep them free from diseases.

Some of these activities and programmes are listed below:

- Maintain cleanliness of the villages, towns and cities so that disease causing agents do not multiply. This helps in checking spread of diseases.
It includes garbage disposal, supply of clean drinking water, waste collection etc. from the localities, thereby checking the spread of disease causing vectors (mosquitoes and flies).
- Ensure that standards in food stores, meat and milk outlets are strictly followed.
- Organize outreach services for health promotion and prevention of diseases, including,
  - a) Immunization programmes for infants and children.
  - b) Various awareness programmes against the spread of diseases like malaria, AIDS, polio, leprosy and hepatitis B.
