Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the muscle strength and endurance of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each including a 10-min warm-up, 10-min stretching, 10-min core exercises, and 40-min resistance training. The resistance training was performed using a 100% BW load, with the participants performing 10 repetitions of each exercise. The program was designed to improve muscle strength and endurance, and the results showed that the participants achieved significant improvements in both measures. The authors concluded that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program is an effective way to improve muscle strength and endurance in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the EuroQol-5D questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test, and changes in body composition, measured using a dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry scan. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL, physical fitness, and body composition compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
