Two Essays on the Airbnb Market Debanjana Dey, 2023 This dissertation analyses the Airbnb market in Orange County, FL to provide insight on the performances of short term vacation rentals listed on the platform. In the first essay we examine the factors affecting the demand and supply of this real estate sector before and after the Covid 19 pandemic using occupancy pricing and revenue models. The results identify the aspects of the Airbnb peer to peer sharing model that do and those that do not recover quickly after local covid restrictions are lifted. In particular host experience professional management and proximity to major tourist attractions are some of the key factors that generate greater Airbnb unit occupancy revenue and prices. The effects are stronger in the post covid period. On the other hand Airbnb consumers appear to steer clear of rentals with popular reviews from previous tenants located in high income areas and in ethnic neighborhoods during the post covid period. Traditional hotel rooms participating in the Airbnb market exhibit different post pandemic responses than found for other properties. In addition there is evidence that while hotel participation directly competes with other properties these effects are mediated by shopping externalities created by greater search traffic from hotels on the platform.
