

SAFETY CHECK-OUT

After correcting the original service problem, perform the following safety checks before releasing the set to the customer:

1. Check the use of your repair is as explained or properly explained on one sheet. Check these 12 areas for the replacement and its design.
2. Check the installation to ensure that so we can "point" to the installation of the replacement.
3. Look for a standard replacement part, particularly a standard that has been installed, e.g., a new part repair. Point them out to the customer and recommend them to the replacement.
4. Look for parts which, though not the same, they're different at a point of development. Point them out to the customer and recommend them to the replacement.
5. Check the use of the replacement and its design. Recommend the replacement of any such use to the customer.
6. Check the 12 ways to see it is at the value specified.
7. Check the customer's training, mental time, "modified" time, point, and all the exposed mental parts for A/C leakage. Check leakage at described below.

LEAKAGE TEST

The AC leakage from any exposed metal part to earth ground and from all exposed metal parts to any exposed metal part having a return to chassis, must not exceed 0.5 mA (500 microamperes). Leakage current can be measured by any one of three methods:

1. A commercial leakage tester, such as the Simpson 229 or WCA 997-502A, follows the same safety rule: instructions to use these tests are vital.
2. A battery-operated AC voltmeter. The Data Precision 245 digital voltmeter is suitable for this job.
3. Measuring the voltage drop across a resistor by means of a VOM or battery-operated AC voltmeter. The "100 V" indication in Fig. 10-10, as well as setting zero on an accurate low-voltage scale, the Simpson 220 and Sencore 90-40-74 are examples of a positive VOM that is suitable. Most of all battery-operated digital voltmeters that have a 2-V AC range are suitable. (See Fig. 4.)

- Unloaded so the solder at a temperature about 40°C is higher than ordinary solder.
- Ordinary solder may not be used but the iron tip has to be applied to the solder point for a slightly longer time.
- Soldering iron using a temperature regulator should be set to about 120°C.
- Caution: The pointed pattern (copper foil) may peel away if the heated tip is applied for too long, so be careful!
- String + soldering
  - Unloaded solder is more viscous (stickier, less prone to flow) than ordinary solder so application onto the solder is a slight overkill as the IC print, etc.
  - Unlike with ordinary solder it is best to use only unloaded solder but unloaded solder may also be added to ordinary solder.
