Excerpt from Beasley's Christmas Party
The moon hung kindly above its level roof in the silence of that October morning as I checked my gait to loiter along the picket fence but suddenly the house showed a light of its own. The spurt of a match took my eye to one of the upper windows then a steadier glow of orange told me that a lamp was lighted. The window was opened and a man looked out and whistled loudly.

The maple bordered street was as still as a country Sunday so quiet that there seemed an echo to my footsteps. It was four o'clock in the morning clear October moonlight misted through the thinning foliage to the shadowy sidewalk and lay like a transparent silver fog upon the house of my admiration as I strode along returning from my first night's work on the Wainwright Morning Despatch. I had already marked that house as the finest to my taste in Wainwright though hitherto on my excursions to this metropolis the state capital I was not without a certain native jealousy that Spencerville the county seat where I lived had nothing so good. Now however I approached its purlieus with a pleasure in it quite unalloyed for I was at last myself a resident albeit of only one day's standing of Wainwright and the house though I had not even an idea who lived there part of my possessions as a citizen. Moreover I might enjoy the warmer pride of a next door neighbor for Mrs. Apperthwaite's where I had taken a room was just beyond. This was the quietest part of Wainwright business stopped short of it and the fashionable residence section had overleaped this forgotten backwater leaving it undisturbed and unchanging with that look about it which is the quality of few urban quarters and eventually of none as a town grows to be a city the look of still being a neighborhood. This friendliness of appearance was largely the emanation of the homely and beautiful house.
