1. At the age of 25 Aboubacar Bailo Diallo had plans to leave his hometown of Boulliwel to look for work in the Guinean capital of Conakry . Like many other young Guineans who were forced to drop out of school due to a lack of money, Aboubacar's only hope for escaping the poverty in which he grew up.
2. Aboubacar's father convinced him to join a training program in chicken-raising, funded by a non-governmental organization, as an alternative to leaving home. Two years later, Aboubacar says that it's the best decision he has ever made and that he no longer has an intention of leaving his hometown and his family in search of a better life. With his new knowledge of chicken-raising and the installation of his first chicken coop, he was able to create this 'better life' at home. Beginning with 300 chicks he now has 450 egg-laying hens.
3. Aboubacar is able to contribute greatly to the family's expenses, particularly by paying for medical fees. The income from the chicken farm also pays for the schooling of nine children in his family. Not only is there enough food in Aboubacar's family, but now the babies are well-fed and the children rarely become sick. Now, eggs are consumed on a daily basis by each family in the community. Just two years ago eggs were hardly eaten at all. The eggs are even being sold in nearby village and shipped to the principal regional centers.
