Disruption The process that occurs when a new technology, while digital products may remain "undisrupted," is introduced that the market is served in a different way. NOTE In the process of testing with single subject methods, one of the most common statistical problems is the lack of statistical power. This is because, in the single subject design, there is a relatively small number of observations (usually only one or two) for each condition. The result is that the statistical power is low. The solution is to use a statistical test that is designed for single subject data. The most common test is the binomial test. This test is used to determine the probability of obtaining a certain number of successes in a given number of trials. The binomial test is a non-parametric test, which means that it does not require any assumptions about the distribution of the data. The binomial test is also a simple test to calculate, which makes it a popular choice for single subject data.
