

Journalism Program Director to Meeting Goals

1. State over-significance. Numerous African countries during the twentieth century have experienced nearly identical rapid growth. I would like to discuss some of the reasons for this. The first is the fact that the African continent is a very young continent. It is only about 10,000 years old. The second is the fact that the African continent is a very large continent. It is the second largest continent in the world. The third is the fact that the African continent is a very rich continent. It is rich in natural resources. The fourth is the fact that the African continent is a very poor continent. It is poor in human resources. The fifth is the fact that the African continent is a very diverse continent. It is diverse in culture, language, and religion. The sixth is the fact that the African continent is a very unstable continent. It is unstable in its political and social structure. The seventh is the fact that the African continent is a very underdeveloped continent. It is underdeveloped in its economy and infrastructure. The eighth is the fact that the African continent is a very isolated continent. It is isolated from the rest of the world. The ninth is the fact that the African continent is a very vulnerable continent. It is vulnerable to natural disasters and human-made disasters. The tenth is the fact that the African continent is a very promising continent. It is promising for the future.
