

American Yester Day: A Selected Reading

- Reverend Matthew L. R. Rice (1866-1935) was a prominent New Englander and a resident of New Haven, Connecticut, during the 1910s. While Reverend Rice was a "Methodist" (Methodist and Other Protestant denominations are now united in the United Methodist Church), this New Englander was a Quaker, pacifist, and Unitarian. These three identities have shaped Reverend Rice's work, despite many religious and political differences. Reverend Rice was often an advocate of Unitarianism. He also wrote many articles that supported the United States' entry into World War I, and he was a strong advocate of the League of Nations. Reverend Rice's writings on the United States' entry into World War I and his role in the League of Nations' peace policy, especially his role in establishing the League of Nations Peace Commission, are the focus of this paper.
