

Section 3: Learning in the Brain

Neurons have synapses on dendrites to communicate their status, allowing for other neurons to modify their fire rate or the neuron. These can be excitatory (increasing the chance of firing) or inhibitory (decreasing the chance of firing). These are also synapses for a long-term memory, called long-term potentiation, resulting in a higher connection weight for that connection. The two diagrams below show the structure and synapses for a neuron.

Diagrams show the following basic components of a neuron: soma, dendrites, axon, and synapses. The following table summarizes the components of a neuron.

	Classification	Characteristics	Properties
Unipolar neurons	One process	Only one process (dendrite)	Only one output (axon)
Classical unipolar neurons (e.g. afferent)	Two processes	Two processes (dendrite and axon)	Two outputs (dendrite and axon)
Polynomial neurons	Multiple processes	Multiple processes (dendrite)	Multiple outputs (axon)
Multi polar neurons	Multiple processes	Multiple processes (dendrite and axon)	Multiple outputs (axon)

Arthropods of Tropical Forests Yves Basset, 2003-01-23 Arthropods are the most diverse group of organisms on our planet and the tropical rainforests represent the most biologically diverse of all ecosystems. This book written by 79 authors contributing to 35 chapters aims to provide an overview of data collected during recent studies in Australia, Africa, Asia and South America. The book focuses on the distribution of arthropods and their use of resources in the rainforest canopies providing a basis for comparison between the forest ecosystems of the main biogeographical regions. Topics covered include the distribution of arthropods along vertical gradients and the relationship between the soil litter habitat and the forest canopy. The temporal dynamics of arthropod communities, habitats and food selection are examined within and among tropical tree crowns as are the effects of forest disturbance. This important book is a valuable addition to the literature used by community ecologists, conservation biologists, entomologists, botanists and forestry experts.

Carver, Monica T. Engel, Sally Hawkins, Rene Beyers, Yue Cao, 2025-03-03 Rewilding is a long term and large scale process which works to restore degraded ecosystems or social ecological systems to the point that they are resilient and self sustaining and therefore requiring little in terms of conservation management. Rewilding practice focuses on re establishing ecological processes including trophic levels that were lost mainly due to anthropogenic disturbance. It also aims to affect a paradigm shift in human nature relationships with intentions to better understand the interdependencies between humans and nature so that people can appreciate and accommodate nature in their landscapes and make more informed and sustainable decisions about how we live. In this sense rewilding has real transformational potential. Horticultural Abstracts, 1989. New Zealand Journal of Ecology, 1993. Bibliography of Agriculture with Subject Index, 2000.
