The second component of South African law is common law. Common law is a body of law which is developed by the courts through the process of judicial decision-making. It is based on the principle of stare decisis, which means that the courts are bound by the decisions of higher courts. Common law is a dynamic system which evolves over time as the courts interpret and apply the law to new facts and circumstances.

One of the main sources of common law is the decisions of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of South Africa. The Appellate Division is the highest court of appeal in South Africa and its decisions are binding on all lower courts. The Appellate Division has played a significant role in the development of South African common law.
