BREEDING CHARACTERISTICS OF YELLOW-
BILLED CUCKOOS IN ARIZONA

By

WILLIAM J. HAMILTON III and MARION E. HAMILTON
California Academy of Sciences¹

The yellow-billed cuckoo is widely distributed throughout the United States, southern Canada, and northern Mexico. The maximum nest, Clavicornis as usually known, is found in the great southern half of the continent, southern Canada. There are no reliable observations of nests, Clavicornis as usually known, showing this species has occurred only casual specimens and the only record of the life history consists of southern specimens gathered by Shaw (1909). The southern subspecies, Clavicornis as usually known, is found in widely different areas, its range extending nearly to northern California, Mexico, and the West, especially along river bottoms in the southern part of its range. In California nests of the Yellow-billed Cuckoo have been reported by Sharpe (1911) when observed in populations existing along a stretch of the Colorado River in northern California, and by (1911) and Sharpe (1911) when apparently abundant in populations in the Colorado and Colorado River in northern California.

In Arizona the only records are Hamilton's (1911) report of a specimen of nest along Yellow River, near Tucson, and Hamilton's (1911) specimens of the eggs of the species in the San Pedro Valley near Phoenix.

Summary of Observations

Several studies were made of the Yellow-billed Cuckoo in the field, particularly during August and early September, observations, Arizona, California.
