Objective: The Brøset violence checklist (BVC) is a short-term violence prediction instrument assessing confusion, irritability, boisterousness, verbal threats, physical threats and attacks on objects as either present or absent. The aim of this paper is to describe the evolution and usefulness of the BVC.

Method: This paper reviews studies on the BVC and discusses implications for further research.

Results: Empirical research has shown that it has moderate sensitivity and high specificity with an adequate inter-rater reliability.

Conclusion: The BVC is a useful instrument for predicting inpatient violence within the next 24-h period. The psychometric properties of the instrument are satisfactory. Results from ongoing studies will give important information on cultural differences, the validity of the BVC in less well staffed wards, the clinical use of the checklist and its ability to predict violence throughout all the hospital stay.

Introduction

The Brøset violence checklist (BVC) was developed from the empirical work of Linaker and Busch-Iversen (1). During their study at the Regional Secure Unit at Brøset, Norway, Linaker and Busch-Iversen examined all the daily reports during a 5-year period. They found that 36 different forms of behaviour were recorded during a 24-h period prior to a violent incident occurring. The six most frequent behaviours that occurred were confusion, irritability, boisterousness, physical threats, verbal threats and attacking objects. Entering these six behaviours into a logistic regression analysis showed that all were predictive of violence.

These six behaviours were consequently developed into the BVC, which measures confusion, irritability, boisterousness, physical threats, verbal threats and attacking objects (2, 3). Each of the six items on the BVC is scored for their presence (1) or absence (0). For well-known patients an increase in the behaviour described above is scored as 1, whereas the habitual behaviour while being non-violent is scored as 0. The sum of scores is then totalled. Interpretation of the scoring is given as follows: a sum of 0 suggests that the risk of violence is small; scores of 1 and 2 suggest that the risk of violence is moderate and preventive measures should be taken; and scores of 3 and more indicate that the risk of violence is very high, immediate preventive measures are required and plans for handling an attack should be activated. Figure 1 provides an example of a BVC scoring sheet.

Predictive ability of the BVC

One published study is available that reports on the sensitivity, specificity and inter-rater reliability of the BVC (4) and this study will be summarized. However, the reader is directed towards the main published paper for specific details and tabulated data. Many studies are currently underway and these will be reported on later in this paper.

Almvik et al. (4) studied 109 patients (52 men and 57 women) admitted to four acute wards at four different psychiatric hospitals in central and southern Norway, during a 2-month period in the spring of 1997. Patients were rated using the BVC on admission and for three consecutive days on each of the three nursing shifts. Violent incidents were recorded using the staff observation aggression scale (SOAS) (5). Twelve patients were reported to have been involved in a total 34 violent incidents (four males and eight women). Data were missing for one reported incident, therefore 33 violent incidents were analysed. The distribution of scores between the violent and not violent was found to be significant, indicating that the

Implementation of Violence Risk Assessment Tool on In-patient Psychiatric Unit Manuel Alvano,2016 Violence towards healthcare workers in acute care settings particularly mental health units is increasing nationwide causing safety and financial concerns for health care organizations Efforts were made to decrease assaults directed towards healthcare staff on a twenty five bed adult mental health unit in a large academic university hospital The aim of the project was to decrease assaults by twenty five percent in six months after implementation of a Violence Risk Assessment VRA tool The ultimate goal was to maintain assault rates below NDNQI Assaults on the unit for the fourth quarter of 2015 were 2 92 NDNQI 2 05

Assaults with injury were 2 43 NDNQI 0 75 A literature review was performed to ascertain valid and reliable tools in predicting assaultive behavior which resulted in three VRA tools with high predictive value the Broset Violence Checklist BVC Dynamic Appraisal of Situational Aggression DASA and Modified Overt Aggression Scale MOAS Each tool was piloted on the unit for two weeks followed by a survey to staff regarding their choice of tool based on risk assessment ease of use and acceptability Appendix A The DASA Appendix B was chosen by the staff and approved by the Nursing Steering Committee Next steps include implementing the DASA tool in the electronic health record with follow up metrics to determine its effectiveness in identifying and decreasing assault potential Recommendations include implementing EBP interventions to prevent violence for patients identified as assault risk Violence Assessment and Intervention James S.

conduct violence risk assessments and to synthesize clinical and research data into comprehensive reports and oral testimony Violence risk assessment requires a well formulated and comprehensive risk management plan Andrade and the authors present that plan and demonstrate how it can be clearly implemented in practice With numerous clinical case studies this book illustrates the process of conducting violence risk assessments outlines the tools used in these evaluations and explains how information is translated into an overall assessment and guide for future risk management Key Features Investigates the etiology of violent behavior and provides a review and analysis of recent literature Discusses both adult and youth violence providing insight into the developmental course of aggressive behavior throughout the lifespan Contains chapters on special populations including female offenders intimate partners psychopathic and mentally ill offenders and sexually abusive youth Useful to practitioners from various fields including social work psychology and psychiatry as well as students in these disciplines Ultimately this book provides practitioners with an understanding of risk assessment treatment and risk management serving as an authoritative guide to applying empirical findings to mental health practice

Guiding Clinical Judgment and Management Kim Allison Reeves, 2015 Historically the focus on inpatient units has not been the prevention or management of violence risk but reacting to the violence after an incident Violence on these units leads to physical emotional and economic consequences for perpetrators victims and the mental health system Although short term risk assessments have been developed to specifically address the risk for inpatient violence these measures have only been implemented on the inpatient units and not in the Emergency Department ED which is often the first point of contact for the mentally ill The purpose of the present study was to determine if a framework that uses structured professional judgment SPJ principles in the Emergency Department ED could predict violence within an inpatient unit The Inpatient Violence Screening Tool IPVST SPJ framework was comprised of several pre existing measures and four additional items culled from a literature review These measures include the Br set Violence Checklist BVC Almvik Ogloff McNeil the VSC VSC R and outcome data were collected from files of the follow up sample The results of this study partially supported the use of the IPVST as a risk assessment framework in the ED to prevent inpatient violence There was consistency in SPJ ratings amongst the majority of the PTNs The IPVST total score and SPJ rating were significantly related to management strategies as well as significantly related to inpatient violence The AUCs of the total scores of the IPVST and the individual measures were between .62-.65 except for the BVC which was not a significant predictor of inpatient violence The AUCs for the categorical risk rating of the BVC DASA VSC and VSC R were between .54-.64 Implications for risk assessment and management are discussed
