- c. Why are fisheries important to our environment?
- Fisheries are important to our environment for several reasons. They provide a source of food for humans and other animals. They also play a role in the carbon cycle by absorbing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. Additionally, fisheries can help to maintain the health of the oceans by removing excess nutrients and preventing algal blooms.

 - i. Ocean primary production
 - ii. Land primary production
- Ocean primary production (OPP) is the process by which phytoplankton in the ocean use sunlight to produce organic matter. Land primary production (LPP) is the process by which plants on land use sunlight to produce organic matter.
- e. How do light conditions and nutrient availability impact primary production?
- Light conditions and nutrient availability are two factors that can impact primary production. Light is necessary for photosynthesis, and nutrients are necessary for the growth of plants and phytoplankton. If either of these factors is limited, primary production will be reduced.
