

AP Biology - Chapter 5 Guided Reading Assignment

1. What is molecular biology and why is it important biology?
Molecular biology is the study of biological processes at the molecular level. It is a branch of biology that deals with the study of the structure and function of molecules, such as DNA, RNA, and proteins. It is important because it helps us understand the basic processes of life, such as how cells grow, divide, and die.
2. What does a scientist investigate with and what is the difference between a surveying and experimental science molecular?
A surveying scientist is one who observes and describes the natural world. An experimental scientist is one who manipulates the natural world to see what happens. The difference between the two is that a surveying scientist is more interested in describing the world as it is, while an experimental scientist is more interested in understanding how the world works.
3. Describe the process and progress of cell transformation.
Cell transformation is the process by which a cell takes up and incorporates foreign DNA into its genome. This process is used in a variety of ways, including to create transgenic organisms, to study gene function, and to produce recombinant proteins.

4. Labeling prokaryotic cell surface - structure and function

5. What is surface area to volume ratio and importance of it as it applies to the organism and it?
The surface area to volume ratio is a measure of the relative surface area of an organism compared to its volume. It is an important factor in determining the rate of exchange of materials between an organism and its environment. A high surface area to volume ratio allows for a greater rate of exchange, while a low ratio results in a slower rate of exchange.
