It was not true in the prewar period. If anything worked well, it was the fact that the people themselves generally turned in on average 100 percent of their income tax, and that was a very high figure. But after the war, the self-taxation system was broken down. The State, at that point, was not able to collect the taxes. The State had to go to the courts and sue the taxpayers, and that was a very costly process. It was not until the late 1940s that the State was able to collect the taxes again. The State was able to collect the taxes again, but it was not until the late 1940s that the State was able to collect the taxes again.
