After the 1990s, the Chinese government "gradually" increased its economic regulation of the Internet, according to a new study by Chinese scholars. The scholars, from Tsinghua University and the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, argue that the Chinese government's regulation of the Internet has been "gradual" and "gradualistic," as opposed to the "revolutionary" and "radical" regulation of the Internet by the Chinese government in the 1990s.

11. What is the primary purpose of the following sentence?

continued their single government. In this, the government avoided the need to be a state, and the government was a central feature. However, because the government tended always to be a central government, many smaller towns often did not have their own government, either because they had no money, or because they had no sufficient numbers of people to support a government. This was particularly true in the early days of the country, when many towns had very small populations, and the government could not afford to have a government for every town. 11. What is the primary purpose of the following sentence?

For the relatives, the diagnosis creates new anxiety about the health of the loved one and themselves, while the patient creates anxiety in relatives, and feels he must hide his true self. The family physician is in a position to help the patient and the family to understand the disease and its progression, and to help the patient to accept his diagnosis and to live with it. The physician can also help the patient to accept his diagnosis and to live with it.
